This if my first topic on this forum, i am pretty new to eZ Publish but i already kinda like it. I am trying to set it up on my local Slackware machine, but the installation wizard does not display well in the famous web browser called Lynx.

Do you guys have an idea ?

You may want to start using a real browser dude.
My 2,5 cents,
Cheers,

Article title - ezjscore: eZ Publish JavaScript and Ajax framework

★★★★☆ Wednesday 23 December 2009 7:45:21 pm

by John Doe | 14 comments

Ezjscore is an eZ Publish extension that provides a simple framework for using Ajax, JavaScript, and (to a smaller extent) CSS. It is bundled with eZ Flow and Website Interface installations in eZ Publish 4.2 and is mostly compatible with previous eZ Publish 4.x versions. In this article, we will provide documentation for ezjscore and show you some example code, all with the goal of helping you to build more powerful, richer, and better performing eZ Publish websites.

Experience level: intermediate

★★★★★ Wednesday 23 December 2009 7:45:21 pm

by James Johnson | 4 comments

This article is a quick guide to one of the powerful publishing features of eZ Publish: the ability to import and export content using the eZ OpenDocument Format (eZODF) extension. This article will describe some of the benefits of the extension as compared to online content editing. It will also provide an illustrated how-to to show how easy the feature is to use.

Ezjscore: eZ Publish JavaScript and Ajax framework

by John Doe | 14 comments

★★★★☆ Wednesday 23 December 2009 7:45:21 pm

Introduction

Ezjscore is an eZ Publish extension that provides a simple framework for using Ajax, JavaScript, and (to a smaller extent) CSS. It is bundled with eZ Flow and Website Interface installations in eZ Publish 4.2 and is mostly compatible with previous eZ Publish 4.x versions. In this article, we will provide documentation for ezjscore and show you some example code, all with the goal of helping you to build more powerful, richer, and better performing eZ Publish websites.

Target population and prerequisites

Sometimes, during a web application development, you need to interface with your client's software(s) and/or websites in order to keep a common and coherent session within its applicative environment. To do this, it is often useful to use a special tool : SSO (Single Sign On). This article illustrates one way of integrating an eZ Publish based web application into an existing SSO architecture

<?php /* #?ini charset="utf-8"?

[UserSettings]
ExtensionDirectory[]=jvsso
SingleSignOnHandlerArray[]=Lolart

*/

The principle of this kind of handler is quite simple, as you just need to develop, in an extension, a PHP class implementing handleSSOLogin() method. Please note that I assume you know how to develop a basic eZ Publish extension. If it's not the case, you may refer to this excellent article.

You probably found very useful to have a large knowledge database freely available in the eZ Community. Tutorials and articles, ranging from how-tos explaining how to get started with eZ Publish, to advanced topics like performance optimization, through step-by-steps detailing the concrete usage of a specific component in eZ Publish, are the base material for knowledge exchange within the community. They allow for a constant, up-to-date educational process for all community members at no exception.

You may have faced a shortage of such material in a specific area, or simply feel like wrap-up a real-life experience with everybody : it is time to share back, show your skills, openness and understanding of how a community works : write a tutorial.

It does not need to be a novel, a focused, to-the-point 2-steps tutorial is just as valuable as lengthier, broader-scope ones. Very visual and illustrated pieces of content are gold bricks, and even better, short screencast tutorials, wrapped-up with the necessary bits of descriptive textual content. We also help you focus on the content by providing you with a typical structure (a template document).

Wish-list

Here is a wish-list of subject the community would like to have tutorials about. You may want to pick ideas here, or bring your own !

- 1: How to setup an image/content carousel
- 2: How to setup a related content block
- 3: Etc.....

How to proceed

Download this template and base your formatting on it. It ensure that all downloadable PDF versions are homogeneous. <link-to-template>.

Contact us (community@ez.no) from the moment you start writing, this will help us make sure efforts can be merged when two persons are writing on the same topic simultaneously.

Send an email to community@ez.no , attaching the article you wrote. The short review process will then start, and once the submitted tutorial matches the set structure and expectations, it gets published on the community portal.

Please note that writing an article is the most remunerative activity in the Community Program <link to community program, individual part>

Administration interface

"Admin2", the new admin re-design is the biggest visual change in this release. Efforts have been put into making the design lighter, more modern, faster, more extendable, more consistent and only show the elements the current user has access to.

Additionally several key user interface operations have been given some love with focus on letting both editors and power users be more efficient on day to day task. For instance, ajax on moving class attributes up / down, focus on added class attribute, an extra toolbar in top of content & class edit interface, inline search on relation datatypes, a more compact tabbed interface for node details, and while not only admin2 related, the help / description text on class and class attributes.

New eZ Publish release includes configurable dashboard functionality where users can see various information coming from website activity. Access to your last drafts or to your latest content has never been this easy. Content is displayed in dashboard blocks depends on the current user permissions. Dashboard enables developers to add their own customizable blocks. Each dashboard block is template based and can be setup very easily just by defining it in dashboard.ini file. Blocks has configurable information about number of content items displayed as well as priority which determine when block should be displayed.

Translation of eZ Publish

Translating eZ Publish into many languages has always been an important part of the community's activity. The fruitful collaborative work of the many contributors nowadays results in 25 languages available in the standard eZ Publish. This team of volunteers has empowered herself with the following mission :

"Constantly improve the translation of eZ Publish, enhancing the existing ones and adding new ones, in phase with the releases."

A dedicated project supports this initiative, hosted on <http://projects.ez.no>, as well as forums for translators to freely exchange on topics related to translation :

Dedicated project : http://projects.ez.no/ezpublish_translation

Translation forums : http://share.ez.no/forums/translation

Submitting a translation follows a simple procedure, described on the project's homepage. Have a careful look at it :)

eZ Community Program 2010: for Individuals and Companies

The global eZ Community Program reflects eZ Systems dedicated care towards its community, and the eZ Ecosystem 's core philosophy: Open, Share, Innovate. By being open, sharing ideas and experiences together, we believe we can achieve greater things.

This program is designed to accelerate collaboration between eZ and Community Members to reach lots of great successes for all parties involved. It calls for all members of the eZ Ecosystem to participate to a steady growth, attraction, openness, helpfulness, exchange, innovation, intensity and fun increase, making this community the right place to step by when working with eZ Software.

The platform enabling this program is mainly <http://share.ez.no>. Other platforms may occasionally be involved (eZ Publish issue tracker for instance).

This first version of the program is meant to evolve along with the community itself. It will structure, expand and become even more attractive in a flexible manner, to constantly suit the essential needs of eZ Community actors.

Should you have any question regarding the Community Program, feel free to ask it to [community \[at\] ez \[dot\] no](mailto:community@ez.no), you will be warmly welcomed.

Etc etc....

Localized forums

With people participating in this community from all over the world, we feel that providing localized forums gives everyone a place to discuss eZ products and more, also in their own preferred languages.

You can check out the localized forums at <http://share.ez.no/forums/localized-forums>

If you are part of a local community, and you do not have your own portal and you are looking for a place/forum to discuss eZ, feel free to contact us. Send as a request at community@ez.no.
